

The community council populations given in this spreadsheet are based on the General Register Office of Scotland (GROS) Small Area Population Estimates for 2009. GROS publishes these estimates for datazones, which are standard areas for the presentation of local statistics and have typical populations of between 500 and 1,000 people. These form the basis for the calculation of community council populations by the Highland Council in which datazones are divided between council areas in proportion to the number of houses each contains. This is a recognised technique which gives reasonable results but makes a number of assumptions and does have limitations, particularly when calculating populations for small councils. The figures given in this spreadsheet are therefore the best available but are estimates and should be treated as such.
